

YoLo bRo

(Someone wise one said that all great pieces of art start with this exact phrase to which an alternative is 'sup bitch' but I don't want your kids to look back and think that ikka maushi used bad language in college) (Guess this is what we have to settle with for now) (Bacche this is also how you write an Amit Joshi report too-font size twelve, times new roman, 1.5 spacing)

ANYWAY, I have so much to say.

So much.

I don't even know where to begin because no matter what I write, it will never fully capture the way I know you, the way I see you, and the way I feel. But if there's one thing I know for certain, it's that I am beyond grateful to have you in my life. (cringe?) And you know I don't say that lightly (seeing my incapacity of saying ykw :)

I would be six feet under without you. I think everyone who knows me and knows you knows that too. Knows how much I rely on you for my sanity and my happiness (and also my grades because GUESS WHO NEVER KNOWS ANYTHING) (but we don't care about that because we're so cool!) (There are also more reasons but let's stick to happiness and sanity because again, the bacche do not need to know how i wore your new underwear or how you get my clothes or how we have talked about the end of the world and conversely also the start (meaning reproduction), how a coffee addiction is going to kill me, and also how we have hate on every breathing person at this point (no regrets they fully deserve it though). Yeah I don't think they need to know all that. Happiness and sanity, lets stick with that. I miss Puneri chat rn)

I'm realising just about now that I sound like a materialistic person (21 years too late apparently), but all I hope is that you get all the same things from me. The happiness and the retention of sanity and more importantly just trust.

Trust that I know you, trust that you know me, and trust that I'll always have your back.

I don't remember meeting you (except for the five seconds near Main Audi when I had that horrendous blush on), but I always just remember knowing you and being your friend. I don't really remember a transit period or an introduction. And if that means something (because of course everything has to mean something), it's the fact that we're supposed to be friends forever (as tight as a fifth-grade friendship pact) because even when we're not friends (hehe endsem season stress just gets to us I think) (I need to stop using these annoying parentheses), I'm never afraid of the fact that things are wrong.

Everything that plays out for us always has and always will work in our favour because I'm telling you, Bhoomi Kadam, the stars are aligned for us.

They are. That's been evident since the first day of SIP.

And because apparently I cannot write anything without becoming philosophical halfway through, let's take a step forward. Worst-case scenario.

Not that I'm planning on it (and neither are you) but let's prepare for everything.

We text each other like clockwork on birthdays. We stalk each other's Instagram stories without reacting to every single one for no reason. We run into each other somewhere and spend five minutes catching up before rushing off to wherever adulthood has dragged us.

As I'm typing this, I know it won't happen.

But even if it does, that's okay.

It's SO normal.

It's just the way life goes.

And I know you're probably thinking, "How is she so chill about this?" or "Is this the moment she finally matures?" Or like "Oh this bitch never cared anyway!"

Oh no.

I have a solution, and a rather good one at that.

Foolproof, actually. Because this solution depends solely on the fact that you are you and I am me.

That won't change in one decade or five and don't have to do anything.

Nothing at all.

If we happen to lose touch someday, we're going to circle back into each other's lives like two twines intertwined because that's just how it's supposed to go.

It's a tale as old as time. There's nothing that we have to worry about.

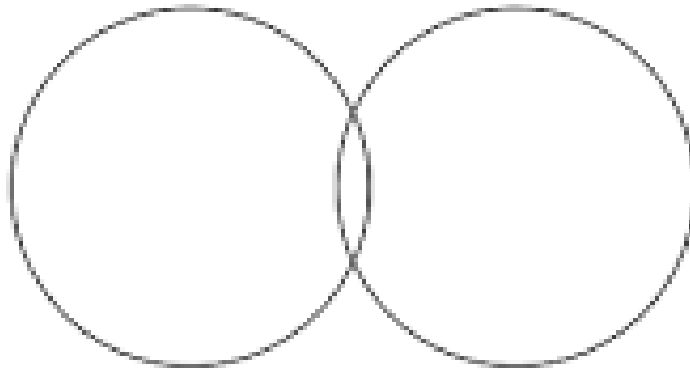

I know I sound like somebody's mom with the whole "everything happens for a reason" speech, but to be fair to me, I'm not making this up.

We're science students.

We must follow the scientific method.

Hypothesis, experiment and proof.

You make so many acquaintances everywhere and all the time. And because it's in my bucket list to do the same from this year, I'll gather my own group of acquaintances. I'm so sure that at least a few of our acquaintances will know each other because we're sure to run in parallelly moving circles that intersect at atleast two points. (We also live (or will have lived) in Pune so there's that)

When we see each other again, we'll know it was always supposed to happen.

But let's continue on our scientific trail of thought for one quick second.

Statistically, humans are a mistake.

A repeating coincidence.

The Big Bang, the event that marked the beginning of our universe, was a cosmic fluke.

Then our solar system formed. Then Earth ended up exactly where it needed to be. Then billions of years of evolution happened. Then thousands of generations of people existed. And somehow, after all of that, you happened.

The version of you that exists today is the manifestation of impossible odds. And if those were the odds of you being you, the same odds existed for me being me.

That's already crazy enough. But then, out of 8 billion people, we were born at the same time.

We happen to live in the same country. Then we went to the same college, then the same class, then the class got changed and you decided to live on mumbai bangalore highway.

And then somehow, through all of that, we became friends.

Bhoomi, look at the odds of that.

The stars aligned. It's STATISTICALLY the most insane thing to ever happen.

The point is, live out your dreams without fear. Anything you do has inherently better odds of working out than you coming into existence ever did.

Nothing is too courageous and Nothing is too ambitious and Nothing is too impossible because the impossible has already happened. AND NO CAP CAUSE I JUST PROVED IT TO YOU.

And somehow, against every ridiculous probability imaginable, I got to know you.

So go do every terrifying thing you've ever wanted to do and apply for things you're convinced you won't get and go to lonavala for vibes. (hehe)

The stars aligned once.

They'll align again.

Happy 21st (omg)